Bronwyn Voyce

Strategic Commercial Leader

Cairns, Queensland, Australia

"I've spent years reflecting on my purpose, and more than anything, the process validated what I already knew. I particularly liked the threads running through the story and the way it broke things down. The patterns themselves were completely unsurprising, but seeing them articulated so clearly was incredibly valuable."

Dr Ken West

Performance Scientist

Tegernsee, Germany

"I did this twice, first with the story that started my journey and again with where I am now. I hit your tech with the abstract and practical details of my experience of the past 20 years. The reflection, the language, the energy of it, all feel optimal. The insights are valuable."

El Chambers

Co-Founder Women Unleashed

"Diane's What Only You Can Bring™ experience opened my mind and heart to the possibility and awareness that I already have what it takes, it made it clearer for me to see."

Geoff Nelson

"The process inspired me and stimulated my creativity.

I can now see my creative path more clearly and follow it more consciously.

I realised that's probably what I've been doing all along, turning instinctive impulses into conscious choices."

Keren Smedley

Managing Director Experience Matters

Freemantle, Western Australia

"I was amazed at the accuracy of the report, which really highlighted the things that I know about myself having had years of therapy. This did it in less than 5 min and highlighted the areas which were both difficult and good and offered thoughts for how to move forward into the future."

Adrian Hewat

Head of Participant Journeys at Golf Australia

Brisbane, Queensland, Australia

"This self-discovery journey didn't just teach me about potential; it unlocked the reality of my own capabilities. Trusting my ability to perform has shifted my entire mindset, strengthening my confidence to lead and tackle challenges head-on. My potential is truly limitless."

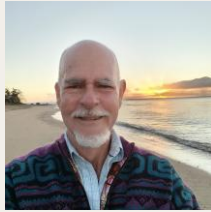

Mikaela Joe

"I enjoyed the opportunity to reflect on what has lead me to become who I am, and with that awareness how I can continue to create the life I want."

Daniel Wurf

“I really enjoyed this! The structure of the language helps me articulate a well-rounded, deeper conversation without trying to provide a solution. It gives me questions to spend time pondering, and the balance it creates is extraordinary. This is gold. Real gold.”

Gloria Grace Wallace

Producer, Founder Heartlight Centre for Conscious Living

“Participating in What Only You Bring to the World has been a meaningful and affirming experience. The reflections I received helped me see my life’s journey with new clarity and compassion. They named strengths and patterns I’ve carried quietly for years — my ability to transform personal trials, to weave diverse spiritual practices, and to hold sacred space for others. What touched me most was the reminder that my offering to the world arises from being, not striving. I am grateful for the care and insight with which my story was received, and for the encouragement to honour what I uniquely bring.”

Kevin Coleman

Publisher and Author

Toronto, Canada

“This was a wonderful exercise prompting quiet reflection about events unfolding now in my life. The feedback and insights drawn from my experience felt genuine, appropriate, and useful.”

Perri Kaye

Global Nomad

Johannesburg, South Africa

"I found the reflection pdf very insightful. It made me stop and see some things slightly differently. I found it quite valuable."

Hans Tilstra

"As someone who regularly explores feedback and assessment tools related to personal growth, 'What Only You Can Bring' caught my curiosity. Many approaches in personal growth rely on type theory — classifying individual preferences into theory-based personality patterns. This tool takes a different approach: it draws on the participant sharing a critical event, a way of inviting me step up with the contribution that only I can make.

I tested it with a personal story and was struck by the level of personalisation it achieves. No two people would get the same result, and when I offered a second story, the response wasn't repetitive either. It feels less like a programmed quiz and more like an invitation to reflect on whichever chapter of my life I choose to bring forward — exactly what I look for in a responsive, thoughtfully-built tool.

My early impression is that 'What Only You Can Bring' offers something close to a 'fractal' model of exploration — one bounded more by my own imagination and recollection of significant events than by any foreseeable limitation in the tool itself."

“The experience using the Built wit Gemini XPrize surprised me as I was not expecting to feel so emotional recounting my story let alone reading the feedback.

The feedback was on a much deeper level than I had expected. This provided me with validation, inspiration and empowerment as it was of a personal nature.”

PRODUCT & DEVELOPMENT FEEDBACK

“So my thinking is it's really good, but I think there is some value in picking a slightly more targeted audience and reflecting that throughout the idea/platform - i.e. is it corporate reskilling and therefore is there value in teasing out the individuals strengths in a professional setting a little more or is it a tool for other coaches to better support their clients and if so should it be more focused on harnessing people opportunities. I also wonder if it's worth having a few adaptive questions to direct the user prior to their statement about an inflection point in their life. Otherwise I think the landing page could do with a bit more of a sales pitch on the landing page as a hook. A really good framework I've seen for landing pages is: Claim, Reason to believe and then Call To Action - so why should the person who has stumbled upon the page care about What Only You Can Bring, what's the value add for their life and then the CTA. These are just my thoughts though so I could have missed the mark!”
